Industry Update

An Amazon monopoly on federal procurement is the dark future US wholesalers envision if the US General Services Administration (GSA) continues on its current path. Contrary to a congressional directive to include multiple commercial e-commerce portal providers in pilot tests to validate their appropriateness as procurement vehicles for federal purchasing, the GSA has proposed testing only one -- the E-Marketplace Model -- according to a post on the National Association of Wholesaler-Distributors (NAW) website. Amazon is expected to have the edge in the E-Marketplace Model (aka the "Amazon Model") due to its dominance of the US e-commerce market. The NAW argues that by focusing solely on the E-Marketplace Model, among the three commercial portal models it developed, the government procurement agency effectively is setting up a barrier to entry for the other two options (the E-Commerce and E-Procurement models) that will be insurmountable by the end of the five-year pilot period, resulting in a de facto monopoly. The stakes are high as the portal choice will affect more than $50 billion in commercial off the shelf (COTS) products annually, says the trade group, which fears its members will face a competitive disadvantage under a single marketplace provider.
